April 4th 2013: Shifting School Culture with Choice Theory Psychology

External control, the present psychology of almost all people in the world, is destructive to relationships and engagement. When used, it will destroy the ability of one or both to find satisfaction in that relationship and will result in a disconnection from each other. Being disconnected is the source of almost all human problems such as what is called mental illness, violence, school failure. Choice Theory psychology, developed by William Glasser, replaces external control psychology. By applying Choice Theory principles, school administrators can facilitate a shift in school culture from
