July 15th 2013: Become an Educated Health Care Consumer

Our featured guest today is Katherine Woodfield. Most of us don't really understand all that much about our health insurance or the new health care laws. To understand the future, we need to look at how the different parts of the health care system interact and how you the consumer can make the system work for you. Learn what the insurance carriers know, and buy the plans that the people who design the plans would buy. Learn the two numbers you need to know when shopping for health insurance. We will also discuss the consumer protections in the health care reform law and why you don't wan

Featured Guest

Katherine Woodfield

After 20 years of working in the pharmaceutical industry and the death of her husband, Katherine Woodfield, MBA almost watched her world vanish. A young widow with three children Katherine almost lost everything. Author of "Don't Buy THAT Health Insurance: Become an Educated Health Care Consumer", the award winning book called "... a must read for every financially independent American", Katherine now brings her insight to the virtual classroom. Katherine's perspective uniquely combines a career in health care with her experience in insurance to create her educational platform. She translates complicated technical and abstract terms into a context that can be easily understood by everyone.
