October 21st 2013: Profiting in a Volatile Investing Environment

It seems difficult for investors to know where to turn in today's environment with possible debt defaults, government shutdowns, and volatile stock, bond and real estate markets. In this interview, Barry Ritholtz, the president of Ritholtz Wealth Management in New York, helps to sort it all out and give you a clear path to profit. Ritholtz was one of the few analysts who saw the housing implosion of the late 2000s coming, and also warned about the unwinding of the derivatives market long before others saw it. He will share his unconventional and controversial views on the current economic and p
